

Walking in their Shoes

A pilot study on the impact of different training interventions on learning and reflection amongst NHS staff

Are you a registered nurse or doctor employed by Cwm Taf UHB?

You are invited to take part in a study exploring the effect of training interventions on learning and reflection around patient care.

This study is being conducted by a team from the University of South Wales, Cwm Taf University Health Board, StoryWorks UK and Cardiff University.

Why are we doing this study?

The Francis Report highlights the importance of nurturing qualities such as caring, compassion and empathy amongst healthcare staff. Health professional education and training has a significant role to play in this and it is important that education approaches maximise the opportunity for learning and reflection.

Stories are increasingly popular as a tool in health professional education and training. We have produced a learning resource built on a short story about a patient's experiences at different locations around the hospital. We want to test the best way of using the resource to promote learning and reflection on patient care and we need your help with this.

Who can take part?

Registered nurses and doctors employed by Cwm Taf University Health Board
